THE TIJ WORKSHOP EXPERIENCE

The TIJ Workshop for Emerging Leaders offers a unique opportunity for practitioners from different sectors to engage with their global peers in policy dialogue facilitated by a network of international and interdisciplinary faculty from the TIJ and the Institute for Global Law & Policy (IGLP) at Harvard Law School. This intensive week, designed exclusively for young and successful professionals, will unlock the complex and dynamic linkages between the rule of law and policy making processes in the economic, political and social development at local, regional and international levels.

The curriculum has been customized to ensure that participants benefit from peer-to-peer learning in order to strengthen their knowledge and skills for addressing the most pressing policy challenges in today's global environment. Through peer-to-peer collaboration, intensive mentoring and cross-training, the Workshop aims to strengthen the next generation of policy leaders as they develop innovative ideas and alternative approaches to issues of global law, economic policy, social justice and governance. Participants will benefit from the mentorship of experts, professionals and thinkers by actively participating in thematic discussions and policy case studies covering topics that highlight the fundamental roles of the rule of law in policy development that affects our daily lives.

The TIJ Workshop will be convened concurrently with the IGLP Workshop for Scholars, an intensive, regionally-focused residential program for doctoral and post-doctoral scholars and junior faculty of law and policy from around the world. The IGLP Workshop for Scholars will focus on the important legal and political choices embedded in policy debate on issues facing Asia and the world. Together, the two Workshops offer a unique environment for discussion between policy professionals and the most innovative young scholars undertaking research in their respective fields.

SPOTLIGHT THEME

THE RULE OF LAW AND SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

The rule of law is no longer seen as only a complement to ongoing attempts at building peaceful and inclusive society, but it is the very cornerstone on which the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) rests. It is like a thread which weaves together all of the goals within the 2030 Agenda, forming vital conditions that creates a conducive environment for the advancement of equitable and sustained economic growth, as well as full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms. In this respect, the rule of law and development are not only strongly intertwined, but are also mutually reinforcing. For public institutions to become more effective, accountable and inclusive, in accordance with SDGs Goal 16, it is crucial that relevant actors in all sectors come to appreciate the rule of law in all its complexities as the key factor in furthering development efforts at the national and international levels.

CURRICULUM DETAILS

Policy Workshop Teams:

These peer-to-peer sessions form the core of the Workshop experience and provide an opportunity for brainstorming together in new ways about pressing policy challenges. Each participant will bring a recent policy experience to the group for discussion. Participants will be mentored by renowned faculty members selected by the Institute for Global Law and Policy at Harvard Law School who will facilitate thematic discussions and encourage interactive learning by drawing from participants' first-hand experiences. This small-group format allows participants to engage on a one-on-one basis with their peers and specialist faculty members, as well as to share ideas and receive feedback on their work. Participants will be assigned to a group and paired with a partner.

Team Presentations:

Presenting a policy initiative is a crucial professional skill, whether one is addressing a senior colleague, a minister, a group of stakeholders or a public setting. Each participant will strengthen this skill by giving a short presentation on a policy issue to their Workshop Team.

Plenary Sessions:

The plenary sessions of the Workshop will feature presentations, lectures or panel discussions by accomplished experts from various fields who will provide participants with insight into the policy spheres at various levels and the underlying concepts of the rule of law. They will also serve as an overview of the most effective thinking about the rule of law as a foundation for making informed political choices and building sustainable policy.

Problem Labs:

This integrative learning experience will focus on how innovation, technology and law could become driving forces behind sustainable development. The Problem Labs will allow emerging policy leaders and scholars to brainstorm on innovative policy solutions and tools to address pressing regional issues with guidance from invited experts and IGLP faculty members. They will have a chance to learn about the complexities of and discuss novel approaches to problems such as cybercrime, access to justice, financial inclusion and corruption.

Streams:

Interactive mini-courses are offered by the IGLP faculty to review current scholarly developments and engage in case-based learning while engaging with global TIJ-IGLP Workshop participants.

Each participant will choose the following streams based on their interests and preferences.

LIST OF STREAMS AND FACULTY

1. Science and Technology Studies

This stream will focus on the relationships among science, technology, and political power in contemporary policy making. The modern state's capacity to produce and use scientific knowledge is significant both in the production and maintenance of political order and in shaping or justifying the choices faced by policy elites. We will focus on the role of scientific knowledge in policy-making oriented to environmental "sustainability."

Ben Hurlbut
(United States)
Arizona State University

Sheila Jasanoff
(United States)
Harvard Kennedy School

2. Law and Development

This Stream investigates legal reform strategies geared towards inducing economic growth and social welfare in developing countries. We will consider a range of approaches to government and markets and the influence of international legal regimes for trade, investment and human rights. We will explore the role of law in economic and social theories of development, the global and intellectual context that channels the range of development reform, and recent shifts in development theory and state practice. We will focus particular attention on choices: alternate legal arrangements which may open alternate trajectories for development with different patterns of inequality or social justice.

Helena Alviar
(Colombia)
Universidad de los Andes

Ermal Frasheri
(Albania)
Harvard Kennedy School

Deval Desai
(United States)
The Graduate Institute, Geneva

3. Trade Policy

The legal terrain for trade has undergone a series of reorientations over the last decades, from multilateral to bilateral, to regional – and now to a complex and variegated set of overlapping regimes. We will consider the political – and economic – stakes involved for nations with various perspectives and economic strategies as they engage the regime. Our aim is to help clarify the choices embedded in current regions and options for their productive contestation and change.

Andrew Lang
(United Kingdom)
Edinburgh Law School

Mark Wu
(United States)
Harvard Law School

4. Poverty and Social Inclusion: The Challenges of "New Poverty"

Poverty is becoming more complex than the absence of basic resources. Today it often means living at the margins of social organization; in a world of precarious employment, global inequality and the increasing securitization of daily life. This stream will explore the political economy and ethnographic realities of this "new poverty" and the polices, macro and micro, which affect it and try to deal with it. To sharpen our focus, we will begin by examining contemporary policies aimed at achieving the social inclusion of young criminals in Latin America (often poor young racialised males involved in, for example, drug trafficking and mobile phone theft) and the assumptions, mechanics and unexpected outcomes of such policies.

Luis Eslava
(Colombia and Australia)
Kent Law School

Lucie White
(United States)
Harvard Law School

5. Comparative Legal Policy in Asia – Regulation of Markets and Enterprises

Asia has always presented itself as a challenge to the western liberal legal order. Recent rise in nationalism and the race to market dominance, however, have led to movements towards illiberal laws around the world and also in Asia. This stream will examine some the these trends.

LIST OF STREAMS AND FACULTY

6. Human Rights & Social Justice

This stream will explore the relationship between violence and human rights law and advocacy. Human rights are often imagined as placing limits on violence. But they are also used to legitimate violence and to facilitate the exercise of violent power by individuals and states. We will explore this relationship by considering different forms of violence—spectacular, structural, slow, and revolutionary – and the role of human rights both in attending to and normalizing that violence. We will consider several case studies around issues such as the environment, trafficking, and religion

Ratna Kapur

Vasuki Nesiah

E. Tendayi Achiume

7. Global Regulation, Finance and Tax Policy

This stream will explore the forces which structure the global regulatory terrain. We will consider the tension between global, regional or bilateral trade regimes and the policy space for national regulation; as well as the vastly unequal power of different national regulators, all of whom affect economic life beyond their borders in ways they have and have not anticipated. We aim to help participants map, navigate and alter the complex global regulatory terrain affecting their economic development objectives.

Dennis Davis
(South Africa)

Wei Cui
(China)
University of British Columbia

Robert Chu
(United States)

8. Universal Principles and Local Customs: Child Abduction in East Asian Family Law

The stream will focus on the problems raised by child abduction in broken marriages. In historical and comparative perspective we will deconstruct the logic of paradigmatic court rulings (King Solomon, People's Judge Azdak, ICJ) as well as the counter-pull between universal legal documents and local customs inselected Asian family law cases.

Günther Frankenberg
(Germany)
Goethe-Universität
Frankfurt am Main

Mika Yokoyama
(Japan)
Kyoto University

9. Driving Safely on China's One-Belt-One-Road

Much of the discussion surrounding China's One-Belt-One-Road program (OBOR) has focused on China's objectives, whether it will attain those objectives, and problems that have arisen in specific participating countries. This stream will assume that OBOR will continue, and will ignore how, or whether, OBOR benefits China. We will focus instead on identifying conditions that might allow participating countries to benefit from OBOR, based on their specific circumstances and what we have observed so far about how OBOR functions. Participants will gain an overall picture of OBOR to date, and will share experiences that their own countries may have had. We will then engage in practical exercises designed to identify conditions under which recipient countries can ensure that OBOR works to their benefit.

John Ohnesorge
(United States)
University of Wisconsin

10. Criminal Justice

Effective criminal justice reform thinking and implementation requires deep appreciation of national contextual realities as well as meaningful adaptation of what has proven to work well across national boundaries. In this stream we will develop an analytical framework to examine reform projects from multiple lenses: historical, sociological, institutional, legal, geographical and knowledge/data focused. We will evaluate reform as not only as a technocratic domain but equally as a political phenomenon and strategy. Informed by select international literature, our collaborative learning method will emphasize vital actual experiential insights from our diverse faculty as well as seasoned participants.

LIST OF STREAMS AND FACULTY

11. Corporations in Global Society

In this Stream, we will look at the evolution of the corporation as an institution and explore some of its complex contributions to the organization and governance of social, economic and political life across the globe from the 16th century to the present. In the first session, we will suggest ways in which a richer understanding of the history of the corporation as a governance institution can illuminate contemporary patterns of global ordering. In the second session, we will turn to contemporary corporate ordering through a case study of focused on the Rana Plaza factory disaster in Bangladesh and global supply (or value) chains.

School of Law

Sundhya Pahuja
(Australia)
University of Melbourne

12. The Political Economy of Private Law

This stream will examine the role of private law – both nationally and transnationally – in structuring global political and economic affairs. We are particularly interested in the political choices embedded in private law regimes as they affect inequality and opportunities for development. We will also consider the relationship between formal or official entitlement schemes and the unofficial and often informal world of customary law and social norms for the economic life of both the global poor and the global elite.

Horatia Muir Watt
(France)
Sciences Po Law School

Robert Wai
(Canada)
Osgoode Hall Law School

13. Law and Inequality: Debt and Labor

This Stream investigates legal reform strategies geared towards inducing economic growth and social welfare. We will explore the role of law in economic and social theories of development, the global and intellectual context that channels the range of development reform, and recent shifts in development theory and state practice as they impact labor and the working environment.

Karen Engle
(United States)

Kerry Rittich
(Canada)

14. Property, Informality and Blockchain Technology

Property takes different forms and serves different functions. This stream focuses on informal property interests: squatter holdings, agrarian reform beneficiaries, profit expectations of foreign investors. Our stream explores the nature of these claims. Are these inferior forms of property, mere expectations that may or may not ultimately be formalized, legally enforceable alternative social relations ? Additionally, the stream focuses on blockchain technology. Will this new technology have the effect of truncating the questions above ? Will blockchain technology inexorably narrow the range of standard property rights, or rather provide for more diversity in structuring legally protected interests ?

University College of Law

Outi Korhonen
(Finland)

15. Mapping the Geographies of Power

The iconic "World Map" has conditioned the way international lawyers visualize the relationship between authority and global space. Yet, that geopolitical picture is losing real-world traction.When the United Nations Charter was signed in 1945, New York was the only megacity on the earth with a population of over 10 million. By the year 2030, two-thirds of humanity and three-quarters of the globe's corporations will be located in 40 megacities. International order is rematerializing beyond what modern cartography has long insisted is the map of geopolitical and geo-economic reality. This interdisciplinary stream seeks to conceptualise and visualise the unfolding materialism and inscription of international order today.

ABOUT THE THAILAND INSTITUTE OF JUSTICE

The vision of the TIJ is to be a promoter of change in the enhancement of the justice system and the integration of the rule of law into sustainable development frameworks in Thailand, the ASEAN region, and internationally through research, capacity-building and policy advocacy activities. Building on Thailand's engagement in the UN Commission on Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice and the UN Crime Congresses, the TIJ serves as a bridge that transports global ideas to local practices, focusing on cross-cutting issues including the interconnection between the rule of law and sustainable development, peace and security. The TIJ primarily seeks to promote criminal justice system reform through the implementation of international standards and norms related to vulnerable groups in contact with the justice system while promoting coordination among domestic justice constituencies and strengthening regional cooperation, particularly within the ASEAN region. One of the core beliefs of TIJ concerns the importance of investing in human resources and in the practical knowledge base on the rule of law, since the TIJ recognizes that the rule of law and an effective and fair criminal justice system are integral components needed in order to secure inclusive economic growth, the protection of human rights, and sustainable development.

ABOUT THE INSTITUTE FOR GLOBAL LAW AND POLICY AT HARVARD LAW SCHOOL

The Institute for Global Law and Policy (IGLP) at Harvard Law School is a collaborative faculty effort to nurture innovative approaches to global policy in the face of a legal and institutional architecture manifestly ill-equipped to address our most urgent global challenges. Global poverty, conflict, injustice and inequality are also legal and institutional regimes. The IGLP explores the ways in which they are reproduced and what might be done in response. They aim to provide a platform at Harvard for new thinking about international legal and institutional arrangements, with particular emphasis on ideas and issues of importance to the global South.

The Institute focuses on young scholars and policy makers who bring new ideas and perspectives to comparative and international legal research and policy. The IGLP aims to facilitate the emergence of a creative dialog among young experts from around the world, strengthening our global capacity for innovation and cooperative research. Each year, The IGLP sponsors a variety of conferences, workshops and symposia, both in Cambridge and in collaboration with friends abroad. The IGLP regularly hosts both scholars and policy practitioners as Visiting Researchers and Fellows at Harvard, deepening their collaborative network among those seeking new approaches to international law, political economy and economic development from governments, international institutions, the private sector and the non-governmental sector.

Over the last years, the IGLP has developed a large global network of scholars and policy makers who share their belief that ideas matter, and their commitment to new voices and viewpoints for thinking about global governance, social justice and economic policy. Their common goal is to better understand how power is exercised in the world today, and how original and critical thinking can transform the ways in which policy experts, intellectual leaders and citizens understand our common global situation.
